and Farewell to AtlantisPart 5: The Wrong Side of the BedPart 6: Returning to AvalonPart 7: The Return to NifheimPart 8: The Return to the Final Quest The game started with a simple dialog box for the first time since the G-Man rescued her from the Pandemonium Palace. "You know where the diamonds are?" asked Lara. "I will take you to them," said the G-Man. Lara gave up all control to the G-Man, who guided her to the caves where the diamonds were, but then she was back in the Pandemonium Palace and heard a horrible scream. She dashed into the corridor and saw the G-Man on the floor, holding a knife to his own throat. There was a lot of blood. "I am killed," the G-Man choked. "The worst thing you can do to me is leave me alive." Lara reached the G-Man and looked at him. "Is it true that you have an army of guards and you're a dangerous criminal?" "I am." "I thought you said you are the G-Man." "That's funny. Your name is not the G-Man." "No, it is not. I am the Anti-G-Man." "Wow, that's even more impressive than the G-Man. Who are you? A little bird told me you were a man who lives in an ancient castle." "Correct. I am the God of Thunder. I am the ruler of the earth. I am not afraid of any mortal." "That's what I heard. But you are a criminal. You are a murderer. You are not a god." "I am the God of Thunder, damn it!" "You're sick. You're a monster. You should be locked up and medicated. You should be in a mental asylum." "I am the God of Thunder. And you will take me to Atlantis." "But I just saw you kill your own G-Man." "He was going to kill you. I killed him first. That makes me the best of both worlds." "You killed him? Then you are in trouble. I hate to be blunt, but I think you need to be put down." " 82157476af"
